

Emotions 4 Learning (E4L) Curriculum Summary

The E4L curriculum is a five-year emotional and social curriculum designed for four to nine-year-old children and developed by staff at St John's College School. The E4L curriculum is about stories, feelings, minds, relationships and communication and it has the teacher pupil relationship at its heart. It is based in up-to date theory and research about how young children's minds develop and how social and emotional learning happens. E4L is taught in KG-F1 in place of PHSEE and contains all relevant aspects of the RSE curriculum for this age group. In Form 2, E4L lessons are part of the My Mind Curriculum.

Since emotional and social learning for young children happens first and foremost within the context of secure attachments with significant adults, the aim of our emotional and social curriculum at St. John's is expressed in attachment terms. The primary aim of the E4L curriculum is to promote secure attachments between children and their teachers and teaching assistants so children learn to manage their emotions and use their minds. Most teachers intuitively know what to do to build positive relationships with children although they may not consciously be aware of exactly what they do to build attachments. The E4L curriculum is specifically designed to encourage staff to become more conscious of what they do when they relate to children so they can intentionally deepen their attachments with children.

All learning involves emotions and takes place in the context of relationships. To become effective learners, children need to be able to manage and understand their emotions. They also need to be able to move in and out of relationships: relationships with their teachers, with each other and with each and every learning task. Some children are able to manage their emotions and move in and out of these multiple relationships more easily than others. Research tells us that the children who can do this are likely to be the most effective learners. At St. John's we want to give every pupil the opportunity to learn as effectively as possible. That is why we have developed the Emotions 4 Learning curriculum.

Our understanding of recent research about how social and emotional learning happens in young children has helped us decide what to teach in our E4L curriculum and how best to deliver this curriculum. The theoretical concepts underlying E4L are taken from the fields of attachment, neuroscience, psychotherapy and mindfulness.

The E4L curriculum is a carefully designed iterative curriculum which teaches social and emotional skills. The E4L lessons are not designed to stand on their own. They are designed to work together with the E4L Core Teachings and the E4L Teaching Approaches. Whereas the Core Teachings and Teaching Approaches foster the development of attachment, emotional regulation and self-organisation through implicit learning, the E4L lessons teach these skills explicitly, in an exploratory, experiential and embodied way. In E4L lessons you teach children to build attachments, develop emotional regulation and self-organisation and you teach metacognition by encouraging them to think consciously about thinking, learning and problem solving. There are six lesson themes which run progressively through each year group teaching E4L skills at and developmentally appropriate level.
