

Religious Studies Curriculum Summary

Religious Studies provides children with the opportunity to think about the “Big questions” in life and to consider the answers that have been given to these by people of different religious faiths through the centuries. From the earliest years, children are naturally curious about questions concerning life, death and belief and Religious Studies gives them another vocabulary with which to express, discuss and develop their views. Religious Studies at St John’s aims to:

- Develop in children a reflective understanding of values. RS helps children to think critically and to understand the moral values and choices that they make.
- Provoke challenging questions about the meaning of life and give children an opportunity and language with which to explore these questions.
- Help children to understand different viewpoints and to respect each other, showing kindness and interest in the beliefs of others. It helps children to understand religion as an important way of expressing and understanding human experience.
- Enable children to explore their own sense of identity and belonging.
- Help children to understand the world in which we live.
- Foster a range of learning skills, including: philosophical thought, decision making skills, collaboration, independent working skills, the search for compromise and conflict resolutions that work, skills of dialogue, interpretation and analysis in a coherent context.

RS is taught through discussion, role-play, drawing, debate, interviews, visits and the exploration of religious artefacts.
